As a New Bedford criminal defense lawyer, Attorney Courtney K. Fogarty has spent over 10 years successfully navigating the legal system for her clients. She graduated from the Regent University School of Law in 2011 with an abundance of honors and real-world experience in court processes.

From the moment she started her education, Courtney hit the ground running with her passion for helping people protect their rights. She spent over a year working with the National Right to Work Legal Defense Foundation. This organization helps provide free legal aid to employees whose human or civil rights were violated.

Courtney also completed an externship with a Federal Judge in the Eastern District of US District Court, giving her unmatched insight into how criminal issues are brought before the court. She was tasked with researching and analyzing objections, plus attending sentencing and guilty plea hearings. For years, Courtney has leveraged this experience to protect her clients.

While in school, Courtney also founded the Law Students Military Network and filled the role of President. This organization is dedicated to serving members of the military, including veterans, by connecting them with law students interested in pursuing military or federal cases. Today, Courtney's practice specializes in serving veterans and active-duty military.
